

tribe

Look around, aren't all the best people you know snow people? God still loves those not bitten by the bug – but I'm not sure we really understand them...

In a coffee shop, in a village, in the depths of the Sussex countryside, Tribe bumped into an 80 year old lady who talked about snow touring in Chamonix Mont Blanc. Immediately there was a connection and if there hadn't been this issue of 'Tribe' to write the conversation could have stretched on all day!

What we're saying is, that people who understand and empathise with your love for attaching yourself to one or two planks, and zooming downhill on frozen water; these are the people who truly understand you. The best friends we have are those that we can lose our worries with on the hill, and sink into oblivion with afterwards in an après induced stupor.

So, if you're out in resort experiencing those mid season blues, or stuck in an office dreaming of your next mountain holiday, you're our kind of people. The snowsports community seems to have gone from strength to strength in the last year. Our British teams are better prepared than ever and for the first time we can dare to have expectations, which we'd never before dreamed possible. It's that sense of community, which Natives.co.uk is based on, and from which 'Tribe' was born.

Let's love to love it...

Enjoy
